

One Pohaku at a Time with Paepae o' Heeia

The restoration of our native Hawaiian fish pond in the Ko'olaupoko area provided volunteers opportunities such as gathering coral in buckets to fill in the wall, moving large rocks, cutting and burning mangroves, and learning about the history of the fishpond built 800 years ago by residents of the area. Restoration efforts continue as there is much work to do.

It was a privilege to learn more about this 88 acre fishpond, ancient aquaculture, and the importance of responsible management of our resources practiced long ago. Sustainability never goes out of style!
